MRS. H. GANEY DIES FOLLOWING OPERATION

Mrs. Harriett Valle Boyce Ganey, aged 65 years, died in the Silver Cross hospital, Joliet, Monday afternoon at 4:15 o'clock, January 22nd following an operation.

Mrs. Ganey has been a resident of the Lincoln Estates on the Lincoln Highway east of Frankfort for the past two years, making her home with her daughter, Mrs. Henry Popp. Her father, Judge Francis Valle, where she was born May 30th, 1869. Her grandchildren are the eighth direct generation born in St. Louis. Her father, Judge Francis Valle, served on the bench of the courts of St. Louis for thirty years and was one of the highest ranking jurists of his day. He died in his 87th year.

She was united in marriage with Charles W. Boyce who died thirty years ago. In 1910 she was united in marriage with Arthur Ganey who died in 1928.

Surviving are two sons, Francis Valle Boyce, New York City, Chas. M. Boyce, Chicago, three daughters, Mrs. Helen Popp, Lincoln Estates, Mrs. Ruth Githens and Mrs. Celeste Lyons of Chicago and nine grand children.

Funeral services were held Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Linn's undertaking rooms at 63rd and "A" avenue, Chicago. Members of the Wm. Martin Post No. 725 Veterans of Foreign Wars acted as pall bearers. Burial was in evergreen Park Cemetery.

Mrs. Ganey was of a lovable disposition and made a host of friends, especially in the Lincoln Estates who were greatly shocked at her passing and who will miss her. Mrs. Ganey never recovered from the shock occasioned by the tragic death of her son-in-law Henry Popp, commander of the Wm. Martin Post No. 725 of the V. F. W., of the Lincoln Estates six weeks ago.

Mrs. Ganey owned many interesting and valuable relics which she had requested before her death to be presented to the St. Louis Historical Society as these relics are of particular interest to that city.

A movement has been on for sometime at Tinley Park to secure additional projects under the CWA. It had been planned to place large drainage tiles in the drainage ditch at the north end of the village and then cover up the deep ditch with earth. At a special meeting at the village hall Tuesday night, the committee reported that the CWA is not approving any more new projects at present, so the project in question will have to be shelved for the time being.

Orland Fire Dept., Can Now Answer Outside Fire Calls

The meeting of the Orland Park village board was much enlivened last Monday night when Fire Chief John Helenhouse addressed the village fathers on the inadvisability of the board passing a recent resolution that the fire department should not answer fire calls outside of the village limits. Chief Helenhouse took issue with the village board on this and showed that many of the fires to which the fire department had been called were outside of Orland Park and that many of these people had gladly paid for the service rendered and showed how unfair it would be to deny fire protection to a person in time of emergency. He also pointed out that the majority of the members of the fire department are Orland Park business men and that it would cause much hard feeling if the fire department would have to refuse to respond to outside fire calls.

State Fire Marshall Hoffman of Chicago also addressed the board on this matter and declared that the local fire department should give fire protection to all who should be in need of it. Following these talks, Alderman Thomas Wheeler made a motion that the resolution objected to, be rescinded and the motion was carried.

It appears what caused the passage of the resolution in the first place was that a number of fire calls in Palos Park have not been paid for and one party wrote a letter to the board saying he thought that inasmuch as he was a tax payer in Cook County that he was entitled to fire protection, but that he would like to have it explained to him why the village of Orland Park made a charge for such service.

A meeting of the village board of Palos Park will be held next Monday night and it is understood that the Orland Board is to be represented at that meeting at which time the matter of paying for the fire calls responded to in Palos Park by the Orland Park fire department will be taken up.

As it now stands the Orland Park Fire Department will answer fire calls outside of the village limits the same as they have been doing.

Old Historic Tinley Mill Brought to Mind

The old historic mill which once stood at the north edge of Tinley Park has been brought to mind again by Paul Rauhoff, Tinley Park real estate man who has had a very cute calendar made up with a photo of the old mill. The mill was built many years ago and was used for grinding grain. The mill was operated by a huge pair of fans. The wind was the only power used. In case of a calm day no grinding could be done and the miller would have to wait until a breeze sprung up before he could operate his mill. The huge fans used to throw a big shadow over the highway near the mill causing several runaways and resultant law suits against the mill owners. The use of wind power was finally discarded and a gasoline engine used instead. The old mill was torn down a number of years ago.

Retired Mail Carrier Of Orland Park Is Highly Honored

Mr. William C. Junker, retired mail carrier of Orland Park, was pleasantly surprised on his sixtieth birthday at his home on Thursday evening, January 18th, 1934.

A large legion of his former patrons were members of the surprising group. At about seven o'clock the guests eighty-four in number, began arriving. The former patrons held Mr. Junker in high esteem and in order to show their appreciation and thoughtfulness, they bought Mr. Junker a beautiful lounge chair, which the Rev. Wm. Gorey of St. Michael's Catholic church of Orland Park presented to Mr. Junker with a very inspiring presentation speech in which he spoke of the loyal service Mr. Junker had rendered his patrons during his 32 years of service as rural mail carrier. He said the 32 years of service in mileage equaled a distance ten times around the world.

When presented with the chair, Mr. Junker was left almost speechless, but he expressed his gratitude towards his loyal patrons thru tear dimmed eyes.

The evening was spent in playing games. Among the prize winners were Miss Margaret Hostert, Miss Grace Toelle, Mr. Ralph Agate, Mrs. David Agate, Mr. Lincoln Munch, Mr. Stanley Junker, Mrs. E. Mathers and Miss Viola Bremner.

Miss Marion played the piano and she also played the birthday song at which the guests all arose and sang to Mr. Junker as he reclined in his "new chair." Numerous old time songs followed.

At a late hour refreshments consisting of sandwiches, pickles, cake, coffee and ice cream were served.

The guests in departing all wished Mr. Junker many more such happy occasions.

Abrell was a central Illinois Democratic leader. He had been a grocer and building contractor. His widow, five sons, four daughters, sixteen grandchildren and three great-grandchildren survive.

The strike committee of the Progressive Miners of America ordered "all idle members" to converge on Christian county to picket Peabody Coal company mines operated there by United Mine Workers. It was a march on Taylorville in Christian county a year and a half ago that signaled formation of the Progressive union, shut down mines in the county for a time, and added to crystallize the differences between the two mine factions. The Peabody Coal company is operating mines at Taylorville, Langley, Kincaid and Tovey.

Approval of a plan to broaden utilization of the state's mineral resources was announced by Frank D. Chase, executive director of the CWA for Illinois. The project calls for an investigation of occurrence, composition and properties of mineral resources, with special reference to new and improved uses. Ninety-one workers are to be assigned to the state geological survey to aid the regular staff under Director M. M. Leighton. Of these, 66 are to be geologists, chemists, ceramists, physicists, and engineers. Assignments are to be made on a county basis under a blanket requisition. Director Leighton is to advise the CWA of the number of men needed in a particular county and the CWA will authorize its county committees to assign workers.

New regulations governing the operation of buses and motor trucks on the state highways, providing for financial protection to passengers and shippers against injury and property damage, have been approved by the Illinois commerce commission and will go into effect next month. The new rules were drafted by James E. Clark, an authority on traffic laws, after a two months' study of present needs. Mr. Clark said he made special effort to include in the new rules provisions for the safety of passengers, adequate protection for shippers, and a clause requiring carriers to be able to pay damages in event of injury or loss resulting from accidents. When the order goes into effect carriers will be required to file indemnity bonds and otherwise qualify as responsible individuals, companies, or corporations.

The state highway department confirmed reports that it had discovered numerous instances of irregularities throughout the state on the part of various county highway departments. Ernst Lieberman, chief state highway engineer, refused to say in what counties such irregularities had been found. He did say, however, that nearly every instance disclosed had occurred in the southern part of the state. None of these irregularities, it was said, consisted of defalcations. Most of them were instances in which a county highway engineer, a county commissioner or a township supervisor had placed himself on the pay roll of a construction job while also drawing a salary, or receiving per diem remuneration, by virtue of his official position.

"I'LL BE GETTIN' ALONG"

By ANNE CAMPBELL

HE WAS shabby and grizzled and old. And he stood at the side of the road. In his arms were his clothes, no great load. But all that his frail arms could hold.

He had tried all in vain for a ride. As he stood in the afternoon sun. And I, homeward bound, my work done. Remained for a bit by his side.

At last, as he hummed a blithe song. He turned down the street toward the light. Of the sun sliding down from its height. And he said: "I'll be gettin' along!"

"I'll be gettin' along!" and his tone Had a ringing and resolute sound. And his old feet struck hard on the ground. As they strode toward the sunset alone.

And I, when I heard him, grew strong! In spite of the difficult years. Because of the pain and the tears, I, too, "will be gettin' along!"

GRAPHIC GOLF

AVOID FORCING STRAIGHT LEFT ARM

SO MUCH has been written about the straight left arm that the average golfer forces himself to adopt it. There is little doubt that it has numerous advantages for one who can adapt himself to its specifications, but to the others, and they are legion, it proves a disadvantage. Numerous successful golfers such as Bobby Jones and Densmore Shute use a straight left with distinct benefit, but in their cases it is more or less natural. Jones has used it since his early golfing days; his physique and elastic muscles have allied themselves to this fundamental easily. Many of the golfing gentry, however, only use it by adoption. In some cases they consciously force the left arm to keep straight. Doing this tenses their whole stroke; they are unable to swing freely and their control suffers. For such players it would perhaps be a better idea to allow a slight bend and thus gain a measure of that relaxation that is so essential to a successful golf stroke.

Harry Vardon enjoyed considerable success without using a straight left, and there are many among the present-day golfers, including Harry Cooper (above), who have found it more advantageous to discard the straight left, which did not suit their game, in favor of a freer swing.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

BLACKY THE CROW DROPS A HINT

REDDY FOX sat on his doorstep in the Old Pasture feeling very fine indeed. In the first place he had had a splendid sleep. All the long, sunny morning Reddy had slept, for he had been out all the night before. Now it was afternoon and Reddy was taking a sun bath, a thing he dearly loves to do at times. And while he took that sun bath he was dreaming. He was dreaming day dreams, and they were very pleasant day dreams. He was dreaming of eating. Did you ever have that kind of day dreams? Then you know just how pleasant Reddy's dreams were.

There was only one thing wrong with those dreams. That was that they made Reddy impatient. In the first place he was hungry, and in the second place he knew, or thought he knew, exactly what kind of a dinner he would have as soon as shadow-time arrived. He would have a muskrat dinner, and the very thought of it made his mouth water and water. That is why he was impatient—impatient for the coming of shadow-time.

Aside from this impatience, Reddy was perfectly happy. He had tried all sorts of ways to get Jerry Muskrat up on land where he could be caught, but always without success. But this coming night it would be different. Jerry had promised to be waiting for him at the Smiling Pool after the coming of the Black Shadows. Then together they would start for Farmer Brown's garden, where were growing the rows and rows of carrots Jerry Muskrat is so fond of. They would start to get Jerry a dinner. At least that is what Jerry would think. But they would get a dinner for Reddy.

"What's the News?" Asked Reddy.

Instead, Jerry himself would furnish that dinner just as soon as he was once out of the water.

"He doesn't suspect a thing," thought Reddy. "It's funny how stupid some folks can be, but it is well for me that they are stupid. If Jerry Muskrat really was smart at all, he wouldn't have listened to me. He would have known what I was trying to do. But his appetite was too much for his wits. Jerry is like a lot of others—ruled by his stomach instead of his head, which is very fine for me. Hello, here comes Blacky the Crow. I wonder if he has any news this afternoon."

Sure enough, there was Blacky coming from the direction of the Green Meadows. When he saw Reddy sitting on his doorstep he stopped in the top of a little tree nearby to pass the time of the day.

"What's the news?" asked Reddy. "Just what I was going to ask you," replied Blacky, who is a crafty black rascal and is seldom to be caught napping.

Reddy Fox grinned good-naturedly. "There isn't a thing to tell you," he replied. "I have been asleep ever since daylight and you are the first person I have seen."

"And I," replied Blacky, "can tell you little more except that I saw Jerry Muskrat a long way from the Smiling Pool."

Reddy jumped as if a sharp thorn had suddenly pricked him. "What's that you said?" he exclaimed.

"I said that I saw Jerry Muskrat a long way from the Smiling Pool," replied Blacky. "He was 'way over toward Farmer Brown's cornfield."

"Excuse me," exclaimed Reddy, rising hurriedly. "I have suddenly remembered an appointment which I had quite forgotten. I would like to stay for a chat, but this matter is so important that I must attend to it at once. You understand how it is, don't you?"

"Perfectly," replied Blacky. "Don't let me detain you a moment." Then he spread his black wings and flew away chuckling. You see, he hadn't told Reddy that when he saw Jerry it was quite a while ago and Jerry was well on his way home.

Here is one that is easy; this is sometimes called Jew bread or Date Loaf.

Take a pound of dates, remove the pits and cut fine or chop with one cupful of nuts and just enough orange juice to moisten so that it may be pressed into a small pan or cracker box to shape. When well chilled sprinkle with salt, wrap in waxed paper after cutting into slices or dip the small slices into melted chocolate.

Take one cupful of brown sugar, one cupful of molasses, one-half tablespoonful of vinegar, one-half tablespoonful of butter, cook until it forms a soft ball in cold water. Sprinkle a buttered pan with coconut, pour the hot mixture over this and cool. When it is cool enough to handle, knead and pull, adding enough coconut to use a cupful altogether. Roll into a small roll and cut into inch lengths with the scissors. Roll in coconut and set away to harden. This makes one and one-fourth pounds.

WOMAN'S STATUS INVOLVED

Contrasting views as to the proper status of women were taken in proposals brought up in Germany and in Montevideo (Uruguay) Pan-American conference. Abolishment of woman suffrage is among plans discussed by Nazis for the constitutional reorganization of Germany in the next year. Views on this subject in a brochure by Dr. Helmuth Nicolai are taken as significant because of his having been newly installed in the reich ministry of the interior. He takes the ground that the franchise is the privilege of German "Aryan" men able to bear arms. The exclusion of women is taken also as "an independent and self-evident consequence of the German legal conception of the natural order of things."

Aviation Now Matter of the Commonplace

Aviation in the south Atlantic area has left the domain of stunt flying and entered that of business. The Graf Zeppelin now runs between Friedrichshafen and Rio on a regular schedule, and her comings and goings attract little more attention than those of ships from Europe or the States. French and German interests, represented by the Aeropostale and Lufthansa-Condor lines, compete for the heavy mail and passenger revenues between the European countries and those of South America. The Germans count on four days between Berlin and Rio, which they expect eventually to cut almost in two. This time, that a short while ago would have seemed fabulous, includes the brief spell the seabirds will spend resting on the limb, in the form of an anchored ship, held out for them in mid-Atlantic.

AN EXPERIMENT IN MARRIAGE

By COSMO HAMILTON

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate
WNU Service

JOHN WARRINGTON entered what he called his studio in his usual jaunty way. More jauntily than usual because he was cold with fright and horror at something that he had done. He was trying to hide that fact even from himself.

He went immediately to his desk and picked up a sheet of paper. On this his secretary had pasted a cutting of an advertisement which had appeared in his favorite morning paper. With a crinkle up his spine and a feeling that his hair was rising on his head, he read the words of his own composition for the hundredth time.

WANTED—A charming, alluring, but extremely sensible girl, with a keen sense of humor, the gift of keeping a secret, a deep sympathy, to act as a week-end companion to a man of rectitude; must provide proofs that she is eighteen years of age, of an unblemished character and high morality. Salary generous, dresses provided, all expenses paid. Must not sing or recite. Intelligence not wholly necessary. Applicant should apply at 2-A East 52nd Street, on Friday between ten and one.

Warrington was a playwright, who saw himself in terms of comedy and farce, who looked at life from the point of view of a manipulator of scenes. A delightful person, though, kind, considerate, loyal, supremely decent, deeply in love with his wife and very proud of his home. This scheme of a week-end girl was to show his wife, the beautiful Lallah, the gross disloyalty of running a gigolo. Acting on the assumption that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery and also of ridicule, he had devised a plan of taking home a girl who would be even more attentive, sweet, sympathetic and snuggly than the Orlando Lulworth, commonly known as "Dodo," who followed his wife about. You see he had arrived at that state of matrimonial irritability, jealousy and outrage which makes such an experiment the alternative to a lamentable break.

His secretary's name was Pilgrim and her eyes were extremely cold as she greeted him. "There are twenty-two girls in the apartment," she said. "There would be sixty-two if I hadn't put a notice on the door which runs as follows: 'House full—standing room only now.'"

Warrington was aghast. What had he brought on himself? Feeling extremely frightened he studied a large sheet of paper on which the exemplary Miss Pilgrim had typed the names, ages, occupations and outward characteristics of all the applicants. The first entry ran like this: "Carlotta Potthast, eighteen (?), temporary blond, plucked eyebrows, Angora eyes, large hands, muscular calves, resonant voice, frequent laughter. Remarks: P. L. B. E. N."

"I'm afraid I don't quite under . . ."

"A person likely to be an extreme nuisance." Miss Pilgrim explained these mythical letters in a cold and level voice.

"So I should think," said John. With considerable concentration and a rapidly increasing fright, he read the rest of the entries, hot and cold by turns. He guessed N. D. E. stood for "No darned earthly," of course, and he felt the nasty sensation which comes to men in air raids and when they stand on altar steps during marriage ceremonies. He looked at the list, shut his eyes and blindly stabbed a name. It was Betty Bickel, twenty, mediator, A. C. O. F. I.

In answer to his elevated eyebrows, Miss Pilgrim translated these letters as "A conveyor of false impressions," and added, "I think she ought to do. I'll send her in at once." And almost before our worried friend could adopt an attitude, the room was filled with a drenching whiff of most disturbing scent. Behind this entered a typical giggler with a permanent blush on both sides of a little nose which might have come out of a box of somewhat Turkish Delight. Such teeth! Such ruddy lips! She said immediately, "Well, what's the great idea?"

John didn't answer her question. He asked her one instead. "What made you answer this advertisement?"

"Anything once," said she.

Which proved beyond all question that she wouldn't do. "On your way out be kind enough to leave your telephone number with my secretary," he said.

With a blinding flash of understanding she allowed a cloud of cigarette smoke to issue from her nose. "Scratched," she said. "Well, you're making a mistake. As a week-end companion I should be quite unique." She gave a skip and was gone.

Miss Pilgrim's voice was deep. "I suggest that you see the girl idiotically called Percy Piercy," she said. "She seems to possess every requisite for the shall I say position?"

Although stung by her sarcasm, John took it like a man. You see, he was all against divorce, and until the advent of Orlando, would have sworn in any court that he and the lovely Lallah were the happiest couple on earth.

came little rushes of color from time to time with the most astounding ease; eyes friendly and unsuspicious, filled with a simplicity which, though utterly convincing, was almost beyond belief. It was only when one looked at her mouth that one fell with a crash from confidence to a queer uncertainty. "How-do-you-do?" she said. "I answer in every particular to the requirements set forth. Will you explain just what you mean by week-end companion, please?"

"Yes, I will," said John, "in the strictest confidence. Five years ago I fell in love and won the girl of my choice. She was and is the most charming, beautiful and sterling girl in the world. I'm an idealist, a fanatic, in fact, an old-fashioned man. That is, I detest divorce and regard marriage as the most beautiful thing in life. I have invented this scheme because my wife has been bitten by a microbe which is doing more to undermine marriage than any other bugs which attack the modern home. She has taken up the latest craze of adopting a young man who dances to perfection, utters words of fatuous flattery at all times of day, carries little parcels and takes the dog for a run. It is the new profession for every man with curly hair who simply refuses to work. I detest the little beast. I stumble over his well-shod feet in every room of my house. It's Dodo, Dodo, Dodo, all the blessed time. I simply hate to go home."

"Why don't you kick him out?"

"I can only do that if I go in for a frightful row with my wife, and I'm too much in love with her to do anything like that."

"I see," said Percy Piercy. "Everything's quite clear. I'm to be the female Dodo and shock your wife into realization that the poor old worm has turned. The role of the week-end girl is right down my street."

John clasped her outstretched hand. "Yes," he said. "You are to do for me, only twice as well and twice as horribly, what this wretched Dodo does for my demented wife. You are to drive home with me today and commence proceedings at once, be wholly at my disposal, follow me about, treat me as your pet whenever my wife is present, snuggle and adore and say all the sweetly idiotic things that will make even Lallah squirm."

It would be too rash to report exactly what happened during those dreadful days. It must be stated simply and carefully that John and Percy ran about hand in hand, allowed themselves to be caught in petting postures, and cooed all over the house; sat cheek to cheek in public places and sighed when the moon came out. It was a desperate and horrible business played to perfection by both. It almost went to prove that John was a better actor than he was a dramatist. By twelve o'clock on Sunday John was "Squosslums" to Percy and Percy was "Woosy" to John. Oh, lady, think of that!

But when on Monday morning John's car was brought to the door and Lallah stood framed in the archway, there to say good-by, where was "Woosy"—where? Echo answered the word . . . Did it matter in any case? The experiment had failed. John had worked for nothing. He had provided his wife with a week-end of ceaseless laughter and fun. She had said at the end of breakfast, "Do it again, dear boy. Repeat it all next Friday. It's all too gorgeous for words. Percy, you little wonder, you have the run of the house."

"Smithson, where's Miss Piercy?" Failure or not, it was John's job to drive that lady back.

"Miss Piercy left in a station taxi, sir, while you were up in your room." To which was added a perceptible sigh of relief.

"You must be wrong," said Lallah, showing her beautiful teeth.

"No, madam. Mr. Lulworth phoned for the taxi before going in to breakfast and then drove off with Miss Piercy, sir. I put all his baggage in. Miss Piercy left a note for madam. Would you like me to fetch it, sir?"

Lallah took the letter from Simpson's soft, plump hand. "Your little companion tells me," she said, "briefly and rather well, that she and dear old Dodo had a conference last night. He has a friend, it appears, who's been trying to cast a play, and Dodo came to the conclusion, having watched her work with you, that she was born for the part and he's going to take her to the manager and ask for the part of the boy. I'll read these lines to you. 'Dodo and I are soul-mates and this engagement will lead to wedding bells.' There was a ripple of laughter as the letter fluttered down."

"Camouflage," thought John. "Poor Lallah's deeply hurt." With indescribable gallantry he went to her at once. "I'm awfully sorry," he said. "But it's as easy to find a Dodo as it is to buy a dog. I swear I never supposed that Percy would take him away from you. What do you intend to do?"

Lallah continued to laugh, and as it went on it grew warmer and more like the laughter of the Lallah of those once good days, the sensible, wifely, Lallah to whom John went home with joy.

"I intend to be unfashionable, John," she said, "and drop gigolos—or start a newer fashion and take up with my husband again. You know, this may be a wonderful day for husbands and bring back joy to homes! Imitation is the sincerest—but of course you know the rest."

Poor dear old choking John! If he never had a success in the theater he was to have a long run in his house.

BEAUTY TALKS

By

MARJORIE DUNCAN

THE SENSIBLE SHOE

PHYSICIANS will tell you that walking is the best all around exercise. It brings so many muscles into play. It stimulates the circulation. It serves as a tonic to mind and body. Set aside a half hour every day, more if you can do so, for walking. If you are in the city, get out into the parks. If you live in the country, take a walk in the woods, particularly in the fall. The maples are golden yellow or flaming red. Don't miss them! The long brown pods of the honey locust wave in the crisp autumn breeze, and the dogwood berries are changing green to red.

Straighten your shoulders and breathe deeply. Hum a tune as you walk. And don't just saunter along but walk briskly, purposefully. And be sure that you are wearing sensible shoes. That is very important. For ill-fitting shoes may defeat the purpose of your walk.

Remember that good posture is impossible if feet are not comfortably shod. Remember too that shoes that pinch the feet often etch lines and wrinkles in the face. Comfortable shoes make walking a pleasure, keep feet young, and foot ills at bay. The shoes should be of proper length—not too long (and what is worse) not too short. A shoe expert told me recently that the tendency with American women is to purchase short shoes. Shoes should properly support the arch. They should hug the ankle and fit at the heel. Shoes should be wide enough. Otherwise it may be necessary to tread over the outer edges of the sole. The proper heel is also important. High heels are fashionable for dinner and dance, but the smart woman suits her heels to the occasion. For walking, a medium sized heavy heel (and not a shaped heel, either) is appropriate. Aside from proper support, it enables the feet to do the work for which they are intended and allows the body to throw its weight forward properly.

Choose a strong and sturdy shoe for walking. Also keep your shoes in repair. Run-down heels and worn leather detract from one's personal appearance. They also throw the foot out of natural position. This applies to shoes worn about the house as well as shoes for walking. Be sure that your new shoes meet the requirements cited here. Get a pair of shoes especially for walking. And walk every fair day. Walking is one of nature's simple health and beauty tonics.

PITFALLS OF REDUCING

IN SPITE of the fact that rounder, more feminine and flattering proportions are in vogue, the cry still persists "let us reduce." Are there still so many fat women left in the world? I doubt it. I sincerely feel that in their desire to attain sylphlike forms women are overdoing.

I don't mind counting calories, foregoing sweets and starches, and saying encouragingly "no, thank you" to a generous portion of rich dessert; I don't mind doing a little setting-up exercises every day to burn up excess food instead of allowing it to store and settle in fatty bulges. By all means reduce if you really have to. But know when you have had enough.

Many women are carrying this reducing business to extremes. They don't "quit" until they've broken down every last ounce of fat. By that time not only their weight but often their spirit and temper and health and resistance have also had their share of reducing. Know when you have had enough. Some mechanical devices have proved helpful, but only in conjunction with the sanest and safest method—approved by physicians as harmless—and that is diet and exercise. Food is the fuel you feed the engine called the body. Try to gauge the amount of fuel it needs to carry on so that it will burn all of it instead of storing the excess in fat. That is what physicians will tell you. If the excess is already there, cut down on the intake and increase the physical work by exercise. Depend upon this balanced combination of diet and exercise to do the work. And as you value your health, take no medicines or internal remedies except under the supervision of a reliable physician.

And another pitfall to guard against: don't reduce your figure at the expense of your face. Sudden and too swift reduction often leaves the face drawn and haggard looking. And reducing without compensating skin and contour care too frequently is responsible for flabbiness and wrinkles. The skin is elastic. It stretches over the layers of fat beneath. When that fat falls away, what have you? A very flabby outlook. Two things every woman who is reducing should use for skin and contour—a good skin food and an astringent. This combination will feed the tissues and tighten up the slack, thus overcoming flabbiness.

Constipation has been called "beauty's curse." It is no doubt responsible in large measure for the yellowish tinge many complain of. Laxatives are helpful but should not be made a habit. Fruit juice, plenty of water, exercise, green vegetables, are nature's laxatives.

YEARS ADDED TO EXPECTANCY OF LIFE ON EARTH

According to records available to the United States public health service, preventive medicine has made encouraging progress in lengthening life in the United States.

In 1800 the average life span in the United States was about 35 years. The Biblical threescore years and ten were accorded to only a few individuals. By the beginning of the Twentieth century the average life span had jumped to 48½ years. Today Americans live on the average 58 years. In New Zealand the record for average longevity has been achieved, with an average life span of 68 years.

Much of this progress has been attained by the assaults of modern medicine on bacterial diseases. In 1900 the six leading causes of death in the order of their destructiveness were tuberculosis, pneumonia, diarrhea and enteritis, heart trouble, Bright's disease, apoplexy and cancer. By 1932 the six greatest allies of death had changed considerably in rank. Heart trouble had become the chief foe of life. Cancer had advanced to second place, closely followed by apoplexy. Bright's disease had moved up to fourth place, pneumonia had dropped from second to fifth rank, and tuberculosis had become the tail-end.

While at the beginning of the Twentieth century bacterial diseases were the greatest obstacles in the way of living to a reasonable old age, the principal task of medicine today is to discover some way of preventing the organs from wearing out.

It's More Comfortable

The average sportsman thinks more of his old, patched fishing suit than he does of his finest broadcloth dress suit his tailor can make.—Florida Times-Union.

CAMERA CARICATURE

Caricature can now be done with the still or motion picture camera, according to Science Service. An official photographer to the Scott expedition to the South pole has devised an auxiliary lens that allows the making of distorted photographs: "the variable controllable distortograph" fitted on the front of an ordinary camera lens. The device allows the making of motion pictures from a still photograph.

Why Liquid Laxatives are Back in Favor

The public is fast returning to the use of liquid laxatives. People have learned that the properly prepared liquid laxative will bring a perfect movement without any discomfort at the time, or after.

The dose of a liquid laxative can be varied to suit the needs of the individual. The action can thus be regulated. A child is easily given the right dose. And mild liquid laxatives do not irritate the kidneys.

Doctors are generally agreed that senna is the best laxative for everybody. Senna is a natural laxative. It does not drain the system like the cathartics that leave you so thirsty. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a liquid laxative which relies on senna for its laxative action. It has the average person's bowels as regular as clockwork in a few weeks' time.

You can always get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any drugstore, ready for use. Member N. R. A.

Illinois Farmers

Warned Against Certain Hog Buyers

Illinois farmers are warned to beware of hog buyers and small processors who, when purchasing live hogs for commercial slaughter, are reported to be deducting the whole or part of the amount of the processing tax from the regular market price quoted to the producer seller, says Farm Adviser Leonard W. Braham, who is aiding in the supervision of the corn hog adjustment program in Will County.

No such unethical practice has been reported in this community, it is explained, but an announcement from the extension service of the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois, warns that deductions have been reported in several sections of the country. According to the warning:

"Country buyers and others who, in settling for hogs with the seller, make deductions for the processing tax on the bill of sale are penalizing the seller and are tending to frustrate the declared policy of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. Farmers are urged not to sell to buyers who make or propose to make such deductions.

"Names of hog purchasers following such practice, together with full details on individual cases, should be forwarded to Dr. A. G. Black, chief of the corn-hog section of the AAA, Washington, D. C. The administration will use all power under the existing law to prevent fraudulent practices in connection with the collection of processing taxes. Country buyers who do not slaughter hogs are not required to pay the processing tax and any deductions made upon the seller by them merely adds to the buyers' profits."

Corn and Hog

Question Box

Because of the widespread interest in the corn-hog adjustment program in Will County and the many individual problems that arise as the local campaign progresses, the News Bulletin is publishing some of the more common questions, together with answers given by the extension service of the College of Agriculture of the University of Illinois, and Farm Adviser Leonard W. Braham:

Q.—A person owns sows which are placed with producers under an agreement whereby such person retains ownership and gets back the sow and a specified number of pigs at some future time. Can such person include the litters of such sows when determining his average production in 1932 and 1933?

A.—No, because he does not own the litters when farrowed and be-

How to Eat for Health and Beauty

Sheila Terry and Gloria Shea of Warner Brothers Pictures seem to have found the secret of how to play in the sun without acquiring a sunburn.

IN THE summertime there's no need to supplement your beauty diets with cod liver oil for you can get your Vitamin D very pleasantly on the beach. In case you've acquired a sunburn or tan along with the Vitamin D, and would like to regain your winter complexion, here are a few suggestions: A healing lotion for a bad case of sunburn is made of equal parts of lime water and linseed oil. Either lemon juice or diluted peroxide is an excellent face bleach, but don't expect results in a minute, and be sure to use cold cream after allowing the liquid to dry.

Q.—Is a producer who has moved from the land he farmed in 1932 and 1933 eligible to sign a contract?

A.—Yes. Moving does not affect the eligibility for signing a contract.

Q.—Can a producer reduce his corn acreage more than 20 per cent?

A.—Yes, but he will not receive payments for a reduction greater than 30 per cent.

Q.—Will the required reduction in corn acreage be based upon the number of acres planted or the number harvested?

A.—Upon the number of acres planted.

Q.—Does the producer have a choice in designating the contracted acres?

A.—Yes, provided the land so designated has been planted to corn at least once during the years 1929-1933. However, if the contracted acres fall on land owned by two different landlords, the contracted acres on the property of each landlord must be covered by a separate contract.

Q.—Can a 4-H club member receive a separate payment on his pigs?

A.—No, this would be impossible, as all pigs have to be included in the total number reported for the farm.

WOMAN HEARS CHURCH SERVICE BY TELEPHONE

Old Parishioner, Ill., Listens to Congregation's Greeting

When the Rev. Dr. Harold L. Stratton, pastor of the Pilgrim Congregational Church in Worcester, Mass., was ready to conduct his services one Sunday morning recently he lifted the receiver from a telephone on the pulpit and called Geneva 7895, the number of Mrs. Emma R. Marden, who lives in Dorchester, Mass.

Mrs. Marden is one of the two original teachers in the Sunday School out of which Pilgrim Church resulted, and it was on the golden anniversary of the school's founding that the novel telephone call was made.

"Good morning, Mrs. Marden," the Rev. Dr. Stratton said. "This is Pilgrim Church bringing you greetings as guest of honor at the 50th anniversary celebration of its Sunday School."

By means of telephone amplification, Mrs. Marden, who is eighty-nine years old and slightly deaf and who has been confined to her bed for the past eight years, was able to hear perfectly. The superintendent of the Sunday School sent Mrs. Marden the greetings of the school and named the people familiar to her who were in the congregation. An appropriate song was sung, and then the congregation, raising their voices, sent a hearty "God bless you," which was clearly heard across the fifty intervening miles by the listening woman in Dorchester. Mrs. Marden then spoke briefly in acknowledgment.

The Orland Park Woman's Club will hold its regular meeting, Feb. 1st at 2 p. m., in the James Creer building. Mrs. Patterson, president of the Palos Park Woman's Club will be the speaker. She will speak on pottery making and will bring two Indian maidens with her who will illustrate pottery, tell Indian legends and sing.

At the meeting of the Orland Park Legion Post Tuesday night, Chaplain Paul T. Sanders conferred two insignias of "The Purple Heart" on two members of the Orland Park Post, Joe Arnold and Leonard Teason who were wounded in action in the world war. The insignia was originally founded by George Washington and is only conferred on soldiers wounded in action.

The local CWA workers have had their week of 30 hours cut down to 24 hours.

Quite a few of Orland residents attended the funeral of Mrs. Mary Jackson held in Mokena Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. Jackson was a former resident of Orland township.

Several surveyors were here the first of the week looking over the Southwest Highway route.

Harry Cox who was removed to the St. Francis hospital in Blue Island last week, has been very ill. A specialist from St. Luke's hospital has been in attendance. If no complications develop, Mr. Cox will recover the physicians say.

Work on cutting down the road in front of St. Michael's church is still under way. The road will be top dressed with gravel.

Mrs. J. F. Schmadeke spent Tuesday last in Joliet.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bischoff were shopping in Chicago Thursday.

Mr. Ben Yunker and son Harold visited in the Arthur Beagley home Monday.

Ed. Yunker is suffering from blood poisoning in his thumb.

We advise that Mrs. H. C. Melchor's recent visit to Miami ended rather unpleasantly. One hour before leaving she was struck by an automobile and knocked to the pavement and her face injured. While the injury is not serious she will be confined to her home for the next two or three weeks.

JAMES C. BELL CANDIDATE FOR U. S. CONGRESS

Evidence that men who served with the armed forces of the United States are destined to play an important part in Republican politics in the 11th Congressional District, comprising Will, DuPage, Kane and McHenry counties, was seen today with the announcement that James C. Bell, World War veteran and Joliet business man, would seek the Republican nomination for Congress in the primaries, April 10.

Mr. Bell, 33 years old, has long been an active figure in the American Legion. He left the Joliet high school at the age of 16 years to enter the World War.

Mr. Bell was born in Joliet, August 15, 1900. On April 27, 1917 he volunteered in the United States Navy as an apprentice seaman. He was in the service two years and three months serving sense of vision and direction. It builds its nests high up in the clefts and away from petty disturbances.

One day while cruising around, an eagle saw a dead pig on a cake of ice floating down the Niagara River. With out due deliberation and discretion as to the consequences, he alighted on the ice and began the feast. Soon the roaring falls loomed up just ahead, and when the eagle attempted to fly away, his feet were frozen to the ice and all his efforts could not loose them, and he went over the raging torrents to destruction.

Many people are like the eagle. At a murder trial now in progress in Chicago, men and women arrive with their lunches at five o'clock in the morning and storm the court chambers until the police have to be called to quell the riot. They are hungry for the gruesome tragedies of life; they thrill at the sight of blood stained garments and the intriguing story of death.

To keep ourselves physically well, we must obey the laws of nature as to food and exertion. To keep ourselves mentally well, we must choose very carefully the things we feed our minds, or ours will be the plight of the eagle that drowned.

LESSON NO. I

The WEDDING MARCH MURDER

by MONTE BARRETT

Copyright, 1933, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.
WNU Service.

SYNOPSIS

Waiting in the minister's study, Jim Franklin, about to be married to Doris Carmody, is stabbed to death. Callis Shipley, one of the bridesmaids, is obviously in a state of anxiety. Peter Cardigan, novelist, and amateur detective of some note, with Sergeant Kilday, of the New York police, begin the official investigation. The dagger used by the murderer is found. Franklin, while waiting, had many visitors, among them his mistress, an actress, "Choo Choo Train," his intended wife's father, Ambrose Carmody; her brother, Rylie; Daniel Bullis, well-known politician, and an unknown woman in a blue frock, who had quarreled openly with Franklin. Rylie Carmody admits trying to stop the wedding, after being informed by Webster Spears that Franklin was still friendly with Choo Choo, despite his approaching marriage. Kilday secures the dead man's keys. Cardigan and Kilday interview Callis Shipley. She is somewhat contradictory in her answers to questions, but the investigators learn nothing of importance.

"Doctor Abernathy says she wasn't the woman in blue that he saw," declared the detective. "But he could be twisting the truth around a little bit himself. This girl did."

Peter hesitated on the running board of the car. "Webster Spears seems to have had a lot to do with this," he suggested. "Rylie claims it was he who told him about Choo Choo Train. Miss Shipley supports this story. That being true, probably he was the man who sent Ambrose Carmody the anonymous telephone call. And he was Doris Carmody's suitor, before Jim Franklin arrived on the scene. That seems to explain his motive. It is obvious that he was trying to stop that wedding."

"But he was never in the sacristy," Kilday objected.

"He wasn't seen in the sacristy," Peter amended. "Let's have a talk with this fellow, Sergeant."

Kilday puffed for a moment in silence. "All right," he agreed finally. "But later. There's one bet I'm not overlooking, which is just as important as this mysterious woman in blue."

Peter showed his interest. "Dan Bullis," declared the detective laconically.

The novelist whistled softly. "Big game!" he exclaimed.

"Looks like they're all big game in this case," Kilday complained. "Any trail we take, we step on somebody's toes."

It was true. The Carmody and Spears families were powers in the financial and social world. Callis Shipley's family had been equally important before she had been orphaned, some years before. Choo Choo Train was a stage celebrity. Nick Royce was editor of the largest tabloid in New York. Doctor Abernathy was rector of the city's most fashionable church and Daniel Bullis, who had often been called the king of Manhattan by a hostile press, was the undisputed political ruler of that broad turbulent belt of the city where vice was organized, allegedly under his protection.

Nor had the newspapers overlooked this. Kilday bought all the late editions available before he and Peter entered a cafe, and scrutinized each with painstaking care during his meal. "Topics says it was a woman and runs pictures of Choo Choo and the bridal party on the front page," he grunted once, pushing the tabloid across to his friend.

"Nick Royce would," Cardigan smiled. "Find the woman! That's the secret of his circulation."

"He doesn't worry me," declared Kilday. "It's the World and Globe that sound ugly. It isn't exactly what they say, it's how they say it. The inference is that the murder was political, and that we won't dare go after the man responsible. The fact that Jim Franklin was expected to be the next governor isn't going to help me any, so far as the papers are concerned. They'll be on my neck. And the district attorney will probably have me on the carpet in the morning. Wait and see. He can't stand this kind of pressure."

"Meaning Bullis, of course."

"Nobody else. Mentioning Bullis is like waving a red flag at every paper in town that doesn't belong to his party. The fact that he was one of the last persons to see Franklin alive has given these papers just the excuse they need. Peter, what made Jim Franklin the logical candidate for governor at the next election?"

"The manner in which he handled the investigation of the magistrate scandal, of course. No one thought he would go after Bullis the way he did, but—"

"But!" exclaimed the detective. "That's the point. But he did. He went after Bullis hammer and tongs. No one thought he would. It made him a popular idol and it made Bullis his enemy. Well, there's our motive, if Bullis is guilty. That's our next lead."

"Then you don't think Callis Shipley or Rylie Carmody—"

"I don't want to think of them until I have to," declared the sergeant. "This is our plainest trail. If it doesn't pan out, I can come back to the others. Bullis was there, and his motive was clear-cut."

"And so was Rylie Carmody's. He was determined to stop the wedding," Peter reminded him earnestly. "So was Choo Choo Train's. She was Franklin's mistress. She had a motive for stopping the wedding. And the woman in blue—whether she may have been—had a motive for stopping it, if she loved Franklin. That's the queer thing about this case. Eight or nine people, that we know of, had an opportunity to commit the crime, and it doesn't require much imagination to find a motive for any of them."

Kilday rose. "I'll take 'em one at a time," he said. "And I'm going to start with Bullis. Coming?"

"Let's go," said Peter.

Daniel Bullis was unexpectedly easy to find. A telephone call from the restaurant located him at his downtown club where he usually dined. He was still at table when interrupted by Kilday's call.

"Come on over, Sergeant," he invited. "I'll be glad to tell you what I know."

But that seemed very little. "Sure I want to see him," the politician said, after seating each of his guests. "How about a drink? What will you have, boys?"

They both declined. It was a matter of principle with Kilday. It was his boast that no one had anything "on" him. Cardigan thought there was a shade too much breezy friendliness in the invitation. It didn't quite ring true.

"Well, you don't mind if I do," said Bullis, ringing for an attendant. "Every one to his own tastes, as the widow said, when she kissed the fig." The quantity of his booming laugh more than atoned for its lack of mirth. He entertained his visitors with an anecdote, obviously intended to reveal his own importance, as he waited for his drink.

"Sure," said Bullis. "A Peach."

"And I told the senator," he concluded. "George, you're all wet."

Peter was not interested in what Bullis had told the senator, but he was interested in the man himself, and welcomed the opportunity to study him.

Daniel Bullis was a huge man, from the hairy hands that had engulfed Peter's during their introduction, to the crown of his head, which seemed almost too ponderous, even for his massive frame. The wide leather chair in which he slouched was almost concealed by his bulk. One long leg was thrown carelessly across the chair-arm, swinging slowly, and blunt fingers drummed incessantly against his knee as he talked.

But it was that ponderous head, which dwarfed the wide shoulders, that fascinated Peter most. In spite of its size, or because of it, Cardigan was not sure which, there was something almost infantile about the man's expression. The short, whitish blond hair, straight as a string, grew low on his forehead, and was unparted. It was not as though it had been combed, long ago, and forgotten, so much as though it had never known a comb. Eyebrows, there were almost none, and this heightened the wide innocence of the man's blue stare, except when he laughed. Then telltale folds of flesh curled up beneath his eyes, revealing an uncertain maturity. The mouth and chin were a direct negation of Bullis' other features, for there was strength written in the lean lips and wide sweep of jaw.

The drink arrived, and the politician drained half the cool contents of the long glass before turning again to Kilday.

"Yeah," he repeated. "I went to see Franklin." He nodded toward a disorderly pile of newspapers by his chair. "I've been reading about it. So I wasn't surprised when you phoned that you wanted to see me. Well?" He twisted in his chair, in order to face the detective. "Let's go. What do you want to know?"

"First I want to know what you were so anxious to see Franklin about, Mr. Bullis?"

"Anxious?" The politician weighed the word. "Well, I guess you'd call it that. I had to see him. I wanted to tell him what I thought of him. Why, I helped make Jim Franklin, and he knew it. He'd still be unknown, if it hadn't been for me. That's why he was afraid to see me, after he turned on me."

"Afraid to see you?" Peter interrupted.

"What else would you say?" Bullis demanded contemptuously. "I'd been trying to get hold of him for three days. At his office, his home, his club, everywhere. Why, I've even been paging him over at Choo Choo Train's. But he was dodging me.

"Well, I knew there was one place he couldn't dodge me—the church. So I went there, and I saw him."

"What was it you were so anxious to see him about?" Kilday repeated his question.

Bullis compressed his lips into a thin hard line. "Huh," he grunted, "and you call yourself a detective. Well, I'll tell you. Jim Franklin thought he was going to climb into the governor's chair by sacrificing a few old friends who put him where he was. I went there to tell him he'd never get near Albany, until he was willing to listen to me. And I told him."

"What did Franklin have to say to that?"

"He was in a tough spot. He had to listen to me. And he agreed with me, too."

"You mean to say," Peter leaned forward intently, "that you and Franklin came to an agreement, there in the church study? Did you part friends?"

"Sure," Bullis grinned with his mouth, but his eyes remained palely expressionless. "Jim saw his mistake, and we parted the best of friends."

"Just how did that come about?" the novelist inquired curiously. "You weren't in a very friendly frame of mind, when you went there."

The politician leaned back in his chair. "I have ways of making people agree with me."

"So I see. I'm trying to find out just what you had to say to Franklin, and what he said to you, that caused such a sudden change of feeling between you."

"You'll never know that," replied Bullis shortly. Again he picked up his highball glass, his attention apparently riveted solely on the drink.

"Then perhaps you'll tell us about the woman you saw there," suggested Cardigan. "There was a woman there, wasn't there?"

"Sure," said Bullis. "A peach. Jim always was a better hand with women than he was with politics."

"Perhaps you could describe her," Kilday suggested.

"Well," Bullis hesitated. "I don't know whether I could or not. She was a good-looking, and blond."

"Did she have on a blue dress?" inquired the sergeant.

"I believe so. I'm not sure."

Peter picked up the Topics, crumpled beside the politician's chair, and held up the page of pictures. Choo Choo Train was pictured there. So was Callis Shipley, among the other bridesmaids. "Could you pick her out of that group, Mr. Bullis?"

Bullis hesitated over the pictures. "I don't think she's there," he replied finally. "If she is, I don't recognize her."

The novelist had hardly hoped it would be as easy to identify the woman in blue as that, yet he was disappointed. He continued the questioning. "Was Franklin quarreling with this woman when you entered the room?"

"Yes."

"Do you know what they were quarreling about?"

"In a way I do. It seems that the woman was in love with Jim, and she didn't like this wedding business."

"What did she say?"

"I don't remember everything that was said. I only remember that she was hysterical, and Jim was trying to quiet her. The only words I remember are that she kept saying, 'You can't do this, Jim. You can't do it. I'll ruin both of us, before I'll let you.'"

"Jim was glad to see even me, right then. He quieted the woman, and I told him I wanted to see him alone. She didn't want to leave, and finally Jim said, 'Go ahead and talk. She's all right.'"

"Later, when I was ready to leave, Jim turned to the woman again. 'Can't you see how much trouble I'm in, honey?' he asked her. 'I'll keep my word to you, this time, sure. Just as soon as I get back.' The woman started to cry. 'If I could believe you, Jim,' she said, 'everything would be all right.'"

"Listen," I says to her, 'give him a break. He's going to be married in five minutes.'"

"I don't remember all we said, but she finally agreed to go, and she left with me. We went out the back door. 'My car's here,' I told her. 'I'll take you home.'"

"But she wouldn't let me. She had her own car, a green sedan. I know because I watched her get in."

"What make was the car?" demanded Kilday.

"It was a Cadillac, I think."

The sergeant groaned. "It would be. There are only ten thousand green Cadillacs in this town."

Peter lighted a cigarette and studied Bullis thoughtfully, through its blue haze.

"You could identify that woman, if you saw her again, couldn't you, Mr. Bullis?"

"I don't know. Maybe." The politician returned his stare coolly.

"She made quite an impression on you, didn't she?" This time it was Kilday who asked.

The politician turned the battery of his expressionless eyes upon him. "I said she was easy to look at," he replied.

"But still you couldn't identify her picture in the paper?" The detective granted his disbelief.

Bullis once more examined the pictures spread out across the front page of Topics.

"You seem mighty sure it was one of these girls," he said.

"What do you think?"

"Newspaper pictures aren't always such good likenesses," the politician suavely replied.

Lesson for January 28

STANDARDS OF THE KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 5:1-48.
GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God. Matthew 5:8.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Teaches the People.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus' Rules for Right Living.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Following Christ's Ideals.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Christian According to Christ.

1. The Characteristics of the Subjects of the Kingdom (vv. 1-12).

Those who are members of Christ's kingdom must possess character consistent with the nature of the king.

1. The consciousness of utter spiritual poverty (v. 3). "Poor in spirit" does not mean to be without money (Isa. 66:2), but to come to the end of self in a state of absolute spiritual beggary, having no power to alter one's condition or to make oneself better.

2. Profound grief because of spiritual insolvency (v. 4). The mourning here is not because of external grief but because of the keen consciousness of personal guilt before a holy God.

3. Humble submission to God's will (v. 5). This meekness is an outgrowth of mourning over spiritual insolvency.

4. An anxious longing to conform to the laws of the kingdom (v. 6). The one who has received the righteousness of Christ as a free gift follows after the purity of character which expresses itself in deeds of righteousness.

5. Merciful (v. 7). Subjects of the kingdom now take on the character of the king. He was the pre-eminently merciful one.

6. Purity of heart (v. 8). Since Christ the king is absolutely pure his subjects must have purity in order to enjoy fellowship with him.

7. Peacemakers (v. 9). The one who has received the peace of God through Jesus Christ will not only be at peace with his fellows but will diffuse peace to others.

8. Suffering for Christ's sake (v. 10). The world hated Christ the king. Therefore those who reflect his spirit in their lives shall suffer persecution (II Tim. 3:12).

9. Suffer reproach (vv. 11, 12). To have all manner of evil spoken against one falsely for Christ's sake is an occasion for glorying.

11. The Responsibilities of the Subjects of the Kingdom (vv. 13-16).

The subjects of the kingdom are to live such lives as to purify and enlighten those around them. Their responsibilities are set forth under the figures of salt and light.

1. Ye are the salt of the earth (v. 13). The properties of salt are (a) penetrating; (b) purifying; (c) preserving.

Since salt only preserves and purifies in the measure that it penetrates, so Christians only, as they enter into the life of the world, can preserve it from decay.

2. Ye are the light of the world (vv. 14-16). The subjects of the kingdom should so live as to prevent the unwary from stumbling and falling.

111. The Laws of the Kingdom (vv. 20-48).

1. As to deeds of righteousness (v. 20). The deeds of the subjects of the kingdom must spring out of natures which are like Christ's.

2. As to sanctity of life (vv. 21-26). The duty of the subject of the kingdom is to conserve and sustain his own life and the lives of others.

3. As to organized life (vv. 27-32). The family is the unit of society. The two awful sins against the family are:

a. Adultery (vv. 27-30).

b. Divorces (vv. 31, 32).

4. As to oaths (vv. 33-37). Speech is the absolute test of character. The truth, and that alone, is to be uttered by a subject of the kingdom.

5. As to behavior toward those who do not recognize the laws of the kingdom (vv. 38-48).

a. Not revengeful (vv. 39, 40). Turning the other cheek after being smitten, means, after one insult prepare for another without revenge.

b. Willingness to do more than is required (v. 41). Rather than quarrel with a man for causing you to do that which you cannot help, show willingness to do more.

c. Be charitable (v. 42). Our hearts should always be open, ready to give to all, worthy or unworthy.

d. Love enemies (vv. 45-48). Love to our enemies consists in:

(1) Blessing them that curse us; (2) doing good to them that hate us; (3) praying for those who spitefully use us. Such behavior affords the positive proof that we are God's children.

Wasting Life

Many a person wastes much of life waiting for an opportunity to do some great thing. While thus waiting for large opportunities, they overlook the little daily duties, the doing of which will inevitably fit us for the accomplishment of greater tasks.

A Christian Attitude

No matter how much a man may differ from you, that is no reason why you should not maintain a Christian attitude toward him and treat him kindly at every opportunity.

Train Child in Honesty by Precept and Example

Little children are born neither honest nor scrupulous about anybody's rights but their own. They have to be taught.

I wish there were another word for "scrupulous." But it has a definite shade of meaning that is not conveyed by "honest." It associates itself with actions and principles rather than things.

It is not difficult to teach a child honesty. By precept and example in the home and the general feel of honesty in the air, he can easily be taught never to touch or keep the smallest article belonging to another.

He can also be taught never to lie although this is a more complicated matter. It is not so difficult, however, to understand the fairy tale fibs of children under five who are in the midst of imaginative development and often mistake their own conjurings for truth. However, this stage passes, and if care is taken not to frighten a child out of telling the truth, it is fairly easy to establish.

But daily in a child's life come up questions of "honor"—those subtle things not actually classed under honesty or truth. Unfortunately, his mother is not with him usually to guide him here, for it is after he starts to school and begins his real social contacts that temptation waits around the corner.

A boy peeps at another's paper and copies his work. Tommy sees the boy. He likes the boy and what he does is all right, surely, thinks Tom. He begins to exercise his own eyes and from that time on never loses a chance to crib when he can.

Another form of honor that I consider important is for children to cultivate the habit of never disparaging another child in his talk. A frank opinion is all right. But the deeper thrill of gossip, the desire to do another person damage is a bad trait.

Or to bootlick, to fawn over some one who can be of use, with other sincerity. Opportunists are seldom scrupulous in the finer sense.

There we have it. Stealing other people's work, other people's good names, favors that don't belong to us. Three out of a thousand ways to be unscrupulous.—Olive Roberts Barton, in the New York World-Telegram.

Starrett Live Stock Commission Co.

U. S. Yards, Chicago

A. E. Starrett - M. E. Peschong

There isn't any question but that this popular establishment is an important factor in the commercial life as it is one of the leading live stock firms in these parts. The management is very liberal in dealings with the public and attracts shipments from the country for many miles around.

They are well known as the best live stock market in this part of the state, men who know the cattle and hog business and are regarded for their fair dealings.

The farmers have come to know that they can get from them the highest price that the market will permit for live stock of all kinds, hence they seek no further market.

They have a reputation far and wide as business men of wide experience and straightforward methods and it is not surprising that the volume of the business is ever increasing.

The record of this company is truly commendable and is an evidence of the well placed confidence of so many farmers and raisers of live stock. Their business has increased. This is truly a wonderful showing and one that evidences the fact that the Starrett Live Stock Commission Co., at the U. S. Yards has merited the enviable reputation they have attained.

MOKENA

The Tuesday Evening Bridge Club met at the home of Mrs. Paul Meyers 1st prize was awarded to Miss Lillian Nelson and consolation to Miss Edith Pearson. On February 6th the Club will meet in the home of Ethel Sorenson.

Mrs. Emilia Koeller, known to Mokena friends as Grandma Koeller, mother of Geo. Koeller, sr., and who is past 82 years old, broke her left leg just above the knee last Tuesday, when she fell on the kitchen floor in the home of her son Edwin, in Chicago, where she had been visiting since the day before Christmas. She was removed to the Franklin Blvd., hospital where both limbs are in a cast. Regardless of her suffering, Grandma Koeller is looking forward to soon being back to her home in Mokena, with her son
George and family.

Mr. Grabowitz, Mr. and Mrs. Garnet Grayson of Chicago and Mrs.
Bosart of Beatrice, Neb., were Sunday guests in the Emil Krapp home.
A group of friends and relatives surprised Mr. and Mrs. Henry Yunker in honor of their 30th wedding anniversary, by holding a surprise party in the St. Mary Hall Saturday night. About 100 guests were present. Dancing, entertainment, music and cards were the diversions of the evening. A luncheon was served.
The honored couple was presented with a purse of money.

Mr. and Mrs. John Grogan of Chicago, former Mokena residents, called on Mokena friends last Saturday.
Mrs. Grogan was Postmistress of Mokena and manager of the local Bell Telephone office at one time.
Mr. Grogan is now holding the position of General Freight Traffic Manager for a western railroad. Their many old friends here were glad to see them.

Makes Mirth for Conoco

Tony Sarg, internationally known artist, toy designer, and marionette showman, is the creator of a series of funny Conoco Bronze Gasoline cartoons which will appear in this newspaper during the first three months of 1934. Sarg, shown above with several characters from his marionette show "Treasure Island", was born in Guatemala and educated in Germany. News of his employment was accompanied by the announcement that Continental Oil Company will spend more for newspaper advertising in 1934 than during any previous years.
